AND WHITE

The Alumni Office

Somewhere, amid the chaos of countless neurons, transpire unknown processes which transform inspiration into action and experiences into memories. An explicit order is inherent in these neural reactions. Over the lapse of days which stretch into years, THE GRAY MATTER, the most mystical of essences, receives the distillation of study and practical experience, transforming the novice into a Doctor of Medicine, and then into a mature physician.

ACTIVITIES

THE CLASS OF 1961

We began appropriately — queued up outside the controller's office, where for the first and last time, we all paid tuition on time. We entered with ambition, economically unstable, intellectually unsure, but with firmness of purpose. Now, economically disrupt, intellectually confused, but with some realization of our true capabilities, we leave. In between, we were the Class of '61.

We were a pawn of change. The school we leave bears little resemblance to the one we entered, and the changes in architecture were paralleled by equally drastic changes in curriculum. The specialty quarter has come and gone. Underclassmen hopefully expect the senior thesis to follow a similar course. We wish them luck. While each announcement that came from the administration produced wide ramifications, the most dramatic was the deep purple glow that immediately issued forth from Squire Bickley's arching forehead.

At first we were serenely dedicated and accepting, but as the 20 foot chart on ATP production was unveiled to our innocent eyes, our assurance fell a bit and our innocent eyes blurred. By the time we had absorbed the shock of histology, which turned out to be an introductory course to physiology, pharmacology, zoology, and the history of medicine, and had sliced our unwilling way through Anatomy, we were in fact, as Warren Andrew, M.D., PhD., termed it, "spastic." Most of us survived these lean years, fortunately, and many owe it all to the dawning of Spring Quarter, when we had more time to practice our Yogi, punch punching bags, or maybe even voodoo our hostilities away.

Throughout all of this we managed somehow to become well-known at the local night spots. Walt Ward kept us informed of happenings in the world of sports with his weekly "news bulletins," and the Buies found each other amidst the branches of the abdominal aorta.

We moved on to the pink and blue world of pathology, and to physiology, where performance depended primarily on prior training in engineering. In the afternoons, we passed through microbiology and became thoroughly contaminated on our way to the golf course and tennis courts. The two Fernandos arrived and added to both the social and political aspects of the class. Unfortunately for us and them, they returned too soon to their native land.

..... IN RETROSPECT

We felt far from the bedside as we sat through endless lectures, hearing about everything in medicine except the patients. Our greatest accomplishment, during that second year was learning to go from the third floor of the medical school to the soda shop and back in two minutes, enabling Paul to corner the world's penny market. We were allowed to buy our instruments, and for the next few days examined everything, including our colleagues' posteriors. This was the final lesson before we were sent to patients and house officers. Spasticity, frustration, humility, and fanny fatigue — we were ready.

The thrilling excursion across the Great Divide into clinical medicine brought with it long hours in the lab, and finally the realization that our status at this level of our education was a non-entity. We spent much of our energy expressing our grievances, but to no avail except to ventilate the feeling that characterized us during the third year—paranoia. But we made a few adjustments and learned quickly. Raphael learned that it is easier to hear murmurs when the stethoscope is placed in the ears, and Tew witnessed first hand the changes in the retina during the second stage of labor.

Attendance at lectures declined progressively, but we never missed a ball game. Throughout the year, Lavendar managed to maintain his own personal rounds to see how the secretaries were getting along. In a year of assisting interns and residents we became proficient enough to assist the Big Boys, and began the final year of our education. But as graduation came nearer, we suddenly realized that soon we would be called upon, not by a teacher, but by our own responsibilities to the patient. We had learned by now, in addition to the faults of medicine, its rewards and demands.

So it is with malice toward some, but with a great respect for those who expected much of us and gave much of themselves; with some real ties that only began here, and some that are gratefully ended, the Class of 1961 disperses. In retrospect, we begin the glossing process, forgetting the struggles and remembering the best as being better. What had been black and white now becomes our own particular shades of gray.

Class Historian

DEDICATION

She pauses from her numerous tasks and turns to us with full interest and a pleasant smile to answer our barrage of questions; with patience she explains to us the many details which confuse us in our relationships with the administration. Though tugged at from many directions and expected to know everything, she seems always unhurried, pleasant, and gracious. She meets every student in a manner of sincere interest, and has often been observed to anticipate our problems before they occur.

Katherine Davis, though not involved in our academic enlightenment, has taught us much about the basic, human values which every physician must learn. She is to us an outstanding example of "the personal touch" in a world prone to forget that important virtue. The Class of 1961 dedicates this volume to her, in respectful admiration and appreciation.

THE WHITE MATTER

LINDY KERNODLE
Editor

PAT STUBBS
Co-Editor

I solemnly pledge myself before God and in the presence of this assembly to pass my life in purity and to practice my profession faithfully. I will abstain from whatever is deleterious and mischievous and will not take or knowingly administer any harmful drug. I will do all in my power to elevate the standard of my profession, and will hold in confidence all personal matters committed to my keeping and all family affairs coming to my knowledge in the practice of my calling. With loyalty will I endeavor to aid the physician in his work and devote myself to the welfare of those committed to my care.

DEDICATION

Of the many who have guided us during our life at NCBH, there is one who commands our deepest respect and love. Her enthusiasm for teaching, her vast amount of knowledge, her skill and foresight, her belief and interest in each of us, her warm sense of humor, her encouragement and comfort when we were blue, her keen insight into us as individuals, are but a few reasons she may claim the highest rung of our ladder.

Were we poets, we would say as Wordsworth did.

"A perfect woman, nobly planned
To warn, to comfort, and command."

It is with pride that we dedicate this 1961 edition of The White Matter to you, Mrs. Virginia Max.

CLASS HISTORY

A JOURNEY JUST BEGINNING

The sun was shining brightly on that second day of September, 1958, when seventy-seven of us moved into Victoria Courts and the Nurses Home, as Freshmen nursing students. Some of us had traveled far and some of us had come only a few miles to begin this, a new chapter in our lives. We each had different hopes and different expectations for the next three years; but, within us was a mutual desire to be a nurse.

That first evening, many different emotions toward this new experience were being felt. Some of us were too excited to unpack, some too homesick to unpack, and all of us trying to control the "butterflies", that were jumping around in our stomachs, under control. That first evening marked the beginning of many friendships and many intriguing and inspiring fellowships of fun and work. It marked the beginning of study, of achievements and of disappointments; of learning and growing into more mature, responsible women. Never would we forget this night, yet never would we again be the same individuals.

Strange how much a symbol can mean! That first day, in our not-too-starved blue and white uniforms and crisp white caps, we walked with an extra step of pride and determination. A small part of our dream was coming true—yet we all knew that hard work and plenty of study lay ahead. With our chins held upright, we marched forward during those months, our eagerness to learn showing through and the light of learned confidence beginning to shine on our faces.

The approach of the Christmas Season brought many good times—caroling and going to Christmas parties together, before those wonderful two weeks of vacation at home. As much as we loved being with our families at Christmas, we found we missed our roommates and friends. With mixed feelings, we returned to NCBH to continue our journey of learning.

Knees shaking and with a silent prayer in our hearts, we gave our first injection. Every day there was something new to learn, some fascinating disease or procedure about which to inquire. Never will we forget our first catheterization, our day's journey through the operating room with our surgical patient, and the first moment we really felt a part of the health team.

With summer came the end of scheduled study hours, but not study. We awoke with the birds to go to our seven o'clock classes. Our summer was not all study, however, for we took full advantage of all swimming and sun-bathing opportunities. Also, with summer came the job of moving to our beautiful new apartments at Twin Castles. The added distinction of being Juniors and having "Little Sisters" gave us the courage to journey into our specialties with confidence.

First, came the diet kitchen which involved calculating diets and reading and serving meals. Then came the operating room with its intricate and precise methods of strict technique. Fascinating obstetrics came next to guide our "mother instincts" into imaginary reality. From obstetrics, challenging pediatrics showered us with formulas, croupettes, I.V. fluids, our growth and development charts, and "read me a story". Then, packing our bags again, we journeyed to Raleigh for our psychiatric affiliation.

As Juniors, we also had the pleasure and burden of producing the Spring Follies. We worked hard to make this the best ever and our efforts were rewarded by a large enthusiastic audience. With the money earned from our Follies, we presented the seniors with their Junior-Senior Prom at Graylyn.

Excitement reigned over Twin Castles as the time drew near for our Black Band Supper. Those marvelous feelings of worth and accomplishment were too bountiful to hold and everywhere we proudly showed off our symbol of seniority and achievement. With each passing day of our last year, we realized how much we had learned and how much we still did not know.

We were soon to graduate and leave our student days as part of our past—profitable, discouraging, challenging and provoking past. It was frightening, yet thrilling, to realize that soon we would be graduate nurses; awaiting the final test of State Board exams. But, even as we thought these things, we realized that were it not for three years of interest and guidance from our families and instructors, we would be far from our dreamed goal. Our hearts beat with appreciation and we drew in a deep fresh breath of new-found determination to be the best nurse we could possibly be.

With our heads held high, we walked down that church aisle in our solid white uniforms to recite the Florence Nightingale Pledge. With more appreciation and understanding for our chosen profession than we had possessed three years ago, we proudly repeated those immortal words, "I solemnly pledge myself before God and in the presence of this assembly—".

Each of us would travel a different path after this day of graduation. Each would realize different and individual goals. Each would have her own professional journey to begin, building on those years of preparation, excitement, trial, discouragements and personal fulfillment and growth. A journey of adventure and service was just beginning for all of us.
